Public Prosecutor v Wan Mohd Rahim bin Wan Mohd Zin

HIGH COURT (SHAH ALAM) — CRIMINAL APPEAL NO 41–139 OF 2006
NALLINI PATHMANATHAN JC
18 APRIL 2007

Criminal Procedure — Trial — Sentencing — Whether appropriate

Evidence — Presumption — Possession of stolen property — Evidence Act 1950, s 114 illustration — Whether presumption under s 114 of the Evidence Act was correctly applied

Evidence — Presumption — Failure to call witness — Whether failure to call pillion rider gave rise to adverse inference — Evidence Act 1950, s 114(g)

On 30 December 2004, a motorcycle was reported missing by its registered owner. Seventeen days later, two men with a motorcycle were spotted acting suspiciously by police officers. When stopped, the two men produced identity cards but the pillion rider fled. It was discovered later that the motorcycle belonged to the registered owner. The respondent was arrested and charged with theft under s 379 or alternatively s 411 of the Penal Code. The magistrate acquitted the respondent without calling his defence holding that there was no proof that he had dishonestly stolen the motorcycle or had taken it with the intention of causing loss to the owner and gaining a benefit for himself. Section 114(a) of the Evidence Act 1950 ('the EA') was not utilised but s 114(g) was as the appellant had failed to secure the attendance of the pillion rider. It was concluded that no prima facie case had been made out. The appellant appealed submitting that the magistrate had failed to apply s 114(a) and this occasioned an error of law, the defence should have been called and s 114(g) was erroneously applied. The appeal was solely on the issue of the acquittal under s 379.

Held, allowing the appeal, setting aside the order of the magistrate and calling the defence:

(1) Section 114(a) of the EA is a one of a series of presumptions of fact. As the consequence of the proof of an initial series of facts, the court may presume the existence or happening of a separate act or event, unless there is an explanation or evidence to the contrary. This is exercised having regard to the 'common course of natural events, human conduct … in their relation to the facts of the particular case' (see para 9).

(2) For s 114 to apply it must be proved (i) that the property is stolen; (ii) that a person is in possession of the property; and (iii) that this was soon after the theft (see para 13).

(3) With respect to (i), the record showed that the owner of the motorcycle gave evidence of the loss of his vehicle. This was not in dispute (see para 16).

(4) With respect to (ii), when stopped by the police, the respondent was riding the motorcycle. He had the physical capacity to stop or ride away or drive the vehicle where and how he pleased. He had sole control, custody and dominion of the motorcycle (see para 17). The respondent had to account for possession in order to escape from the presumption (see para 18). It could not automatically be inferred from the pillion rider's conduct that he was in fact the person who had stolen the bike. Possession of the motorcycle was with the respondent at the material time (see para 20).

(5) The possession of the stolen property must have been fairly recent. The time lapse was 17 days. As a motorcycle is a bulky piece of machinery that is not easily disposed of, the time lapse is not so long as to preclude the application of the presumption in this case (see para 21).

(6) Section 114(a) was applicable directly on the facts. The magistrate's decision to the contrary resulting in an acquittal was occasioned by her failure to address her mind to the criteria to be met in deciding whether or not to apply s 114(a). She also decided not to apply s 114(a) for incorrect reasons, namely that certain ingredients to prove theft were not proven, and that the time lapse of 17 days was too long. The magistrate had misdirected herself (see para 23).

(7) As s 114(a) of the EA ought to have been applied, even if s 114 (g) of the EA was applied, the respondent would still have had to provide an account of how he came to be in possession of the motorcycle. The inference that the pillion rider's presence would be adverse to the appellant's case does not detract from the fact that the respondent was at the material time in possession of the stolen motorcycle soon after the theft. This did not affect the issue of whether a prima facie case had been made out (see para 26).

[Bahasa Malaysia summary

Pada 30 Disember 2004, sebuah motosikal telah dilaporkan hilang oleh pemilik berdaftarnya. Tujuh belas hari kemudian, dua orang lelaki dengan motosikal tersebut telah dilihat berkelakuan mencurigakan oleh pihak polis. Apabila disuruh berhenti, dua lelaki telah mengeluarkan kad pengenalan tetapi pemboncengnya melarikan diri. Ia kemudiannya mendapati bahawa motosikal tersebut adalah kepunyaan pemilik berdaftar. Responden telah ditahan dan didakwa kerana mencuri di bawah s 379 atau secara alternatifnya s 411 Kanun Keseksaan. Majistret telah membebaskan responden tanpa memanggil pembelaan bersandarkan kepada tiada bukti bahawa dia telah secara tidak jujur mencuri motosikal atau telah mengambilnya dengan niat menyebabkan kerugian kepada pemiliknya dan mendapatkan keuntungan untuk dirinya. Seksyen 114(a) Akta Keterangan 1950 tidak digunakan tetapi s 114(g) digunakan kerana perayu gagal memastikan kehadiran pembonceng motosikal. Disimpulkan bahawa tiada kes prima facie telah dibuat. Perayu merayu sambil menghujahkan bahawa majistret telah gagal untuk menggunakan s 114(a) dan ini telah menyebabkan kekhilafan perundangan, pembelaan sepatutnya dipanggil dan s 114(g) telah digunakan secara salah. Rayuan adalah untuk isu pembebasan di bawah s 379.

Diputuskan, membenarkan rayuan, mengenepikan perintah majistret dan memanggil pembelaan:

(1) s 114(a) AK adalah salah satu daripada anggapan fakta. Kesan daripada pembuktian siri-siri permulaan fakta-fakta, mahkamah akan membuat anggapan kewujudan atau kejadian tindakan berasingan atau peristiwa, melainkan terdapat penjelasan atau bukti yang menyatakan sebaliknya. Ia akan diamalkan setelah mengambilkira 'kejadian-kejadian lazim yang sama, perlakuan manusia… berhubung dengan fakta-fakta sesuatu kes' (lihat perenggan 6-7).

(2) Bagi membolehkan penggunaan s 114 ia mestilah membuktikan (i) bahawa terdapat harta yang dicuri; (ii) bahawa seseorang mempunyai pemilikkan ke atas harta; dan (iii) bahawa ia adalah selepas berlakunya kecurian (lihat perenggan 9).

(3) Berkenaan dengan (i), rekod menunjukkan bahawa pemilik motosikal telah memberikan keterangan kehilangan kenderaan tersebut. Ia tidak dipertikaian (lihat perenggan 10).

(4) Berkenaan dengan (ii), apabila diberhentikan oleh polis, responden sedang menunggang motosikal tersebut. Dia mempunyai keupayaan fizikal untuk berhenti atau menunggang kenderaan bila dan bagaimana yang dikehendakinya. Dia mempunyai sepenuh kawalan, jagaan dan hak serta kuasa ke atas motosikal tersebut (lihat perenggan 10). Responden terpaksa menggunakan pemilikkan dengan tujuan untuk melepaskan dirinya daripada anggapan (lihat perenggan 11). Ia tidak secara otomatiknya disimpulkan daripada perlakuan pembonceng bahawa dia adalah orang yang mencuri motosikal tersebut. Pemilikkan motosikal adalah dengan responden pada setiap masa material (lihat perenggan 12).

(5) Pemilikan harta yang dicuri mestilah terkini. Selang tempoh masa adalah tujuh belas hari. Memandangkan motosikal adalah kepingan mesin yang besar yang tidak mudah untuk dilupuskan, selang masa adalah tidak terlalu panjang untuk menghalang permohonan anggapan dalam kes ini. (lihat perenggan 13).

(6) S 114(a) terpakai secara terus kepada fakta-fakta. Keputusan majistret yang sebaliknya menyebabkan pembebasan adalah terjadi disebabkan kegagalan mengarahkan mindanya bagi memenuhi kriteria dalam menentukan sama ada ingin menggunakan s 114(a) atau tidak. Beliau juga memutuskan untuk tidak menggunakan s 114(a) bagi sebab-sebab yang tidak betul, iaitu bahan-bahan tertentu untuk membuktikan kecurian tidak dibuktikan, dan selang masa tujuh belas hari adalah terlalu lama. Majisteret telah menyalaharahkan dirinya (lihat perenggan 14–15).

(7) Memandangkan s 114(a) AK sepatutnya dipakai, jika s 114(g) AK digunakan, responden masih perlu menyediakan penerangan bagaimana dia mempunyai pemilikkan ke atas motosikal tersebut. Kesimpulan bahawa kehadiran pembonceng akan memburukkan kes perayu tidak akan mengurangkan fakta bahawa responden adalah pada setiap masa mempunyai pemilikkan ke atas motosikal curi selepas kecurian itu. Ia tidak akan memberikan kesan kepada isu sama ada kes prima facie telah dibuat (lihat perenggan 16–17).]

Notes

For cases on sentencing, see 3(2) Mallal's Digest (4th Ed, 2004 Reissue) paras 25769

Cases referred to

Berry v British Transport Commission [1961] 3 WLR 450 (refd)
Gooi Loo Seng v PP [1993] 2 MLJ 137 (refd)
Mah Kok Cheong v R [1953] MLJ 46 (refd)
Metroplex Development Sdn Bhd v Mohd Mastana bin Makaddass & Anor [1995] 2 MLJ 276 (refd)
PP v Hong Ah Huat [1971] 1 MLJ 52 (refd)
PP v Looi Kow Chai [2003] 2 MLJ 65 (refd)
R v Schama [1914] 84 LJKB 396 (refd)

Legislation referred to Evidence Act 1950 s 114(a), (g)

Penal Code s 379A, 411

Azar Irwan (AG's Chambers) for the Public Prosecutor.
Arriff Azami bin Hussein (Azizzul Adzly & Arriff) for the accused.

Nallini PathmanathanJC:

INTRODUCTION

[1] This is an appeal by the appellant against the decision of the learned magistrate of Shah Alam, Selangor made on 27 September 2006, acquitting the respondent (the accused in the court below) without his defence being called in respect of:

(a) a charge of theft of a motorcycle under s 379A of the Penal Code ('s 379 of the PC'); and

(b) an alternative charge of receiving stolen goods under s 411of the Penal Code ('s 411 of the PC').

[2] The petition of appeal however made reference solely to the decision of the magistrate acquitting the accused under s 379A of the PC. The respondent submitted that the appeal should be restricted to this charge and the appellant acquiesced to this. Accordingly the appeal was restricted to the charge under s 379A of the PC. Several grounds of appeal are set out in the petition of appeal, but during the course of hearing, appellant's counsel confined himself to only two grounds, ie, whether, on the given facts, the learned magistrate had erred:

(i) in failing to apply s 114(a) of the Evidence Act 1950('s 114(a) of the EA'); and

(ii) in applying s 114(g) of the Evidence Act 1950('s 114(g) of the EA') in arriving at her decision.

THE FACTS OF THE CASE

[3] On 30 December 2004, one Mohd Noor bin Long, the registered owner of a motorcycle, bearing registration number BFK 5152, reported the loss of his vehicle. He had parked it outside an apartment block in section 27, Shah Alam and when he returned 25 minutes later, the motorcycle had disappeared. Seventeen days later, on 16 January 2005 at about 8.00 pm, three police officers who were making a routine evening inspection in Serdang, noticed two men on a motorcycle acting in 'a suspicious manner'. They stopped the vehicle for an inspection and asked the two men for identification. The men produced their national identity cards. At this point, one of the men, the pillion rider, ran away. The police officers gave chase, but lost him. They did, however, have his national identity card. The respondent who was riding the motorcycle was co-operative. The officers found on further investigation that the motorcycle, which now bore false number plates with a different registration number, belonged to Mohd Noor bin Long. The respondent was then arrested and charged with theft under s 379A of the Penal Code or alternatively, for receiving stolen property under s 411.

[4] At the trial of this matter, the appellant called four witnesses, namely the owner of the motorcycle, two of the three police officers who had come upon the accused riding the stolen motorcycle, and the Investigating Officer.

LEARNED MAGISTRATE'S GROUNDS OF JUDGMENT

[5] On these facts, the learned magistrate acquitted the respondent without calling for defence, holding that there was no proof that the respondent had dishonestly stolen the subject motorcycle, or that the respondent had taken the motorcycle with the intention of causing loss to the owner or making unlawful gain for himself. She decided not to utilise the presumption under s 114(a) of the EA in view of the lapse of a period of seventeen days between the theft of the motorcycle and the day when the accused was seen riding the motorcycle. The learned magistrate also applied s 114(g) of the EA, stating that the appellant had failed to secure the attendance of a crucial witness, the pillion rider, resulting in a gap in the prosecution's case. She concluded that a prima facie case had not been made out by the appellant.

SUBMISSIONS ON APPEAL

[6] The appellant submitted in summary, that:

(a) the learned magistrate had failed to address her mind to relevant considerations in deciding whether or not to apply s 114(a) EA, thereby occasioning an error of law;

(b) the defence should have been called in this case; and that

(c) section 114(g) Evidence Act was erroneously applied.

[7] In response, the respondent urged the Court, in its appellate capacity and in accordance with well-established principles, to be slow to interfere with the decision of the learned magistrate not to apply s 114(a) of the Evidence Act and to invoke s 114(g)of the EA, particularly where such decision was based on findings of fact. Learned counsel went on to submit that there was no direct evidence of theft and that s 114(a) of the Evidence Act should not be applied because of the lengthy lapse of time between the theft and the recovery of the motorcycle.

THE LAW

Exercise Of Appellate Jurisdiction

[8] I have kept at the forefront of my mind, the well established and documented principle that an appellate court is not to interfere lightly with the findings or decision of the learned magistrate, who has had the advantage of seeing and hearing the witnesses. Any such interference should therefore be cautiously executed and would only be justified where, for example, there has been a misdirection of law (see Gooi Loo Seng v PP [1993] 2 MLJ 137). Bearing these principles in mind, I have proceeded to consider the two issues raised by the appellant in this appeal.

ISSUE 1: WAS THERE A FAILURE TO APPLY SECTION 114(A) OF THE EA?

Presumption Of Fact

[9] Section 114(a) of the EA is a one of a series of presumptions of fact, which as stated in Sarkar on Evidence, Vol 2 (14th Ed) at p 1505: '... are nothing more than logical inference of the existence of one fact drawn from other proved or known facts without the help of any artificial rules of law and they are always rebuttable.' It means that as the consequence of the proof of an initial series of facts by one party, the Court may presume the existence or happening of a separate act or event, unless there is an explanation or evidence to the contrary. The fact that the words used are 'may presume' clearly indicate that it is left to the discretion of the Court to decide whether on any particular set of facts, the presumption should be invoked. The discretion is exercised having regard to the 'common course of natural events, human conduct … in their relation to the facts of the particular case.' The presumption is an evidentiary presumption rather than a presumption allocating the burden of proof. Its effect is to cast on the opponent party the duty of producing evidence to the contrary.

[10] In Mah Kok Cheong v R [1953] MLJ 46, Spenser Wilkinson J had occasion to consider the classes of criminal cases where the law imposed different evidentiary burdens. He said with regard to the category relating to theft and receiving stolen property:

> ... Cases of theft or receiving where the only evidence against the accused is the possession of property recently stolen. These cases are really in a class by themselves; they may be

A looked upon not so much as cases where the law has cast a burden of proof upon the accused, but rather as cases where the law has given special significance to a certain class of circumstantial evidence, namely, the possession of stolen goods. The law is that such possession is in itself evidence of the theft or receiving unless explained; …

B [11] This sums up the applicability and effect of s 114(a).

What is the criteria to be met before considering whether to apply s 114(a) of the EA?

[12] What then are the facts that should be proven, or the criteria to be met, to warrant the possible application of s 114(a) of the EA? In PP v Hong Ah Huat [1971] 1 MLJ 52, Sharma J, set out the facts which have to be proven directly before the Court can even consider invoking s 114(a) of the EA:

C

> ... In every case under s 411 of the Penal Code two facts, namely (i) that a theft was committed and certain articles were stolen and (ii) that the stolen articles were recovered from the possession of the accused have to he established by direct evidence … If these two facts are established and the recovery from the possession of the accused is recent, it is open to the court to presume under Illustration (a) of section 114 of the Evidence Ordinance that the accused is either the thief or a receiver of stolen goods. This presumption though rebuttable, when explained either by direct evidence or by the character and habits of the possessor otherwise, is usually regarded by the jury as conclusive. The question as to what amounts to recent possession varies according to whether the stolen article is or is not calculated to pass readily from hand to hand. It depends upon the nature of the article itself. Wigmore in his work on Evidence says: 'On a charge of taking goods, the fact that A was found, subsequently to the taking, in possession of the goods taken is relevant to show that he was the taker. It is true that several other hypotheses are conceivable as explaining the fact of his possession; nevertheless the hypothesis that he was the taker is a sufficiently natural one to allow the fact of his possession to be considered as evidentiary. There has never been any question of this.
>
> Dealing with the matter Taylor in his book on the Law of Evidence says:
>
> 'This presumption is in all cases of fact rather than of law. It is occasionally so strong as to render unnecessary any direct proof of what is called the corpus delicti.'

D

E

F

G [13] Before s 114 can be applied it must be proved

(i) that the property is stolen;

(ii) that a person is in possession of the property; and

H (iii) that this was soon after the theft.

[14] The word 'possession' implies a physical capacity to deal with a thing as we like to the exclusion of everyone and a determination to exercise that physical power on one's own behalf. It implies dominion and consciousness in the mind of the person having dominion over the object. Possession must be conscious and intelligent possession and not merely the physical presence of the accused in proximity or even in close proximity to the object.

I

[15] In that case, the charge against the respondent was of dishonest receipt of stolen goods under s 411 rather than s 379A. Notwithstanding this, the test remains the same as s 114(a) clearly contemplates the possible use of this presumption either in the case of theft or the receipt of stolen property.

ANALYSIS

(i) Was the property in question 'stolen property'?

[16] With respect to the first fact that has to be proven, namely that the property is stolen, the record shows that the owner of the motorcycle gave evidence of the loss of his vehicle, as described above. This is not in dispute.

(ii) Did the respondent have 'possession' of the motorcycle?

[17] With respect to the second ingredient, possession, the evidence shows that when stopped by the police 17 days after the theft, the respondent was riding the motorcycle. He had the physical capacity to stop or ride away or drive the vehicle where and how he pleased. It cannot be said that he was merely physically present or in physical proximity to the vehicle. To my mind the respondent had sole control, custody and dominion of the motorcycle. He had intelligent and conscious possession of the motorcycle. While it is true that there was a pillion rider, it cannot be said that the pillion rider had possession of the motorcycle as it was the respondent who was riding it. Counsel for the respondent advocated the point that there was no 'possession' by the respondent because:

(a) there was no 'dishonest' possession of the motorcycle and mere physical possession was in itself insufficient to warrant the application of the presumption so as to result in a finding of theft;

(b) in cross-examination the appellant's witnesses had conceded, when it was put to them, that it was possible that it was the pillion rider who had real possession, but had merely asked the accused to drive the vehicle, and

(c) the fact that the pillion rider had 'run away' pointed to the fact that he was the one who had stolen the motorcycle.

[18] With respect, the issue of 'dishonest' possession does not arise at this stage. Once possession is proved (and it has been shown that the property is stolen), then the respondent has to account for it in order to escape from the presumption under Illustration (a) to s 114. The presumption only has the effect of determining an evidentiary point, namely whether the respondent is to be called upon to account for his possession of the stolen property. It does not, at this stage, determine the final guilt or otherwise of the respondent in respect of the theft of the motorcycle. His explanation might well show that such possession as he had was in fact innocent. The full impact of s 114(a) of the EA imputing dishonest possession can only arise if the accused does not or cannot account for his possession of the motorcycle.

[19] As for the evidence adduced during cross-examination from the appellant's witnesses, who had accepted the possibility that it could have been the pillion rider who was guilty of the offence of theft or receiving stolen goods in view of his conduct in running away, I am unable to accept that these answers from the police officers in any way prove that the pillion rider was in fact the de facto person in possession of the vehicle. This is because these witnesses do not and could not have had any first-hand knowledge of the reason why the pillion rider ran away. Such knowledge would be within the purview of the pillion rider and possibly the accused. The answers of the police officers in cross-examination on this point are therefore not relevant.

[20] Finally with regard to the pillion rider's conduct in 'running away', it cannot automatically be inferred from his behaviour that he was in fact the person who had stolen the bike and asked the respondent to ride it. It is equally possible that he fled the scene panicking, on realising that he and the accused had been stopped by police officers; or that he was guilty of some other offence bearing no relation whatsoever to the theft of the subject vehicle. (see Abdullah Zawawi bin Yusoff [1993] 4 CLJ 1 at p 6). On the given facts, possession of the motorcycle was with the respondent at the material time.

(iii) Was the recovery of the motorcycle 'soon after' the theft?

[21] This pre-requisite for the application of s 114(a) of the EA requires that the possession of the stolen property must be fairly recent. In this case, the time lapse is 17 days. The term 'soon after' or 'fairly recent' varies according to the nature of the article and how quickly it can pass from hand to hand. There are no inflexible rules about the minimum or maximum lengths of time which should lapse in order that the presumption may or ought not to be drawn. Each case must depend on its own facts. Given that a motorcycle is a bulky piece of machinery that is not as easily disposed of as, say, a piece of jewellery of a common description, the time lapse of 17 days, or a little more than two weeks, is not so long as to preclude the application of the presumption in this case. A time frame of months might well, on these facts, have been too long a time lapse to fall within the definition of 'soon after'.

(iv) Should the presumption under section 114(a) be applied?

[22] In deciding whether or not to apply s 114(a) of the EA I have kept in mind the caution sounded by Devlin LJ in Berry v British Transport Commission [1961] 3 WLR 450 and echoed by James Foong J (as His Lordship then was) in Metroplex Development Sdn Bhd v Mohd Mastana bin Makaddass [1955] 2 MLJ 276 at 282:

> … Presumptions of law ought to be used only where their use is strictly necessary for the ends of justice. They are inherently undesirable in the sense that ' stoppels are odious' and the 'doctrine should never be applied without a necessity for it'; per Bramwell U in Baxendale v Bennet (1878) QBD 525, 529, CA because they prevent the court from ascertaining the truth, which should be prime object of a judicial investigation, and because if they are allowed to multiply to excess, the law will become divorced from reality and will live among fantasies of its own...

[23] Bearing this in mind, I am of the view that s 114(a) of the EA is applicable directly on the facts of the instant case. The learned magistrate's decision to the contrary resulting in an acquittal of the respondent was occasioned by her failure to address her mind to the criteria to be met in deciding whether or not to apply s 114(a) EA. She also decided not to apply s 114(a) of the EA for incorrect reasons, namely that certain ingredients to prove theft were not proven, and that the time lapse of 17 days was too long. As such, I am of the view that the learned magistrate had misdirected herself when she failed to apply s 114(a) of the EA on the given facts.

The consequences of applying section 114(A) of the EA

[24] If indeed the presumption had been applied, then the evidentiary burden would have shifted to the respondent merely to account for his possession of the vehicle, resulting in defence being called. This shifting of the evidentiary burden in no way alters the burden of proof which always lies with the appellant. If an explanation is given which may be true or which the court thinks may reasonably be true, the respondent would still be acquitted because the appellant would not then have discharged the onus of proof imposed upon it of satisfying the Court beyond reasonable doubt of the respondent's guilt, (see R v Schama [1914] 84 LJKB 396). The onus will always lie on the appellant to show that the respondent was in possession of the motorcycle dishonestly, and not on the respondent to show that he was in possession of the motorcycle honestly. In other words, the application of s 114(a) of the EA does not have the effect of imputing guilt on the part of the respondent to the charge of theft at this stage. That must be a question to be determined on the totality of the evidence after the respondent chooses to account or otherwise for his possession.

ISSUE 2: IS SECTION 114(G) OF THE EA APPLICABLE?

[25] The second issue that was raised in this appeal was the application of s 114(g) of the EA by the magistrate on the grounds that the appellant had failed to call an important witness to the proceedings, namely the pillion rider whose evidence was significant to the case. The appellant contends that the learned magistrate did not consider that it made several attempts to procure this witness's presence by trying to trace him at two different addresses pointed out by the respondent. The appellant did however, have in its possession, the national identity card of the pillion rider, but took no steps to independently procure his presence by conducting searches at the relevant registries. This failure on the part of the appellant is clear.

[26] As s 114(a) of the EA ought to have been applied in the first instance in relation to the charge of theft, even if s 114(g) EA is applied at this stage, the respondent would still have to provide an account of how he came to be in possession of the motorcycle. The inference that the pillion rider's presence would be adverse to the appellant's case does not (in the absence of an account from the respondent) detract from the fact that the respondent was at the material time in possession of the stolen motorcycle soon after the theft. This would not therefore affect the issue of whether a prima facie case had been made out in accordance with the test in PP v Looi Kow Chai [2003] 1 CLJ 734.

CONCLUSION

[27] As a consequence of this failure to apply s 114(a) of the EA on the given facts, the learned magistrate wrongly concluded that a prima facie case had not been made out thereby occasioning an error of law. On the given facts, I am of the view that the appellant had established a prima facie case in accordance with the test in PP v Looi

Kow Chai [2003] 1 CLJ 734. For the reasons above, the appeal is allowed, the order of the magistrate is set aside and defence is called.

Appeal allowed.

Reported by Kenny Wong